EdTheory's University Internship and Volunteer Opportunities Abroad

We launched our first CSR program "Project HOPE" in one of the underserved communities in New Delhi, India. We would not be able to do this without the support and partnership of TejasAsia, an accredited NGO based in India (www.tejasasia.org) .

Project HOPE is a rural community-based special education and related service program.

We welcome students to experience international development first-hand by enrolling in our internship or volunteering for special education and therapy projects in India. Our commitment to youth is to have them engaged in global development and social issues education so that they can make a difference.

We partner with universities to create an unforgettable internship and volunteer experience for people who want to help children in many of our community projects. Participants build leadership skills and cultivate new friendships as they discover an incredible foreign culture in India of over 4,000 years.

The heart of our university internship and short-term volunteer programs is to create opportunities for students to come together for a unique experience, to work towards the well-being of underprivileged youth in many socio-economically struggling communities. We believe that the experience of living and working with people from diverse cultural backgrounds creates understanding, respect, and contributes towards a peaceful and tolerant world. With a long range of possibilities, you can make a significant impact by working closely with locals and gain valuable experience and skills.

Become part of this mission by helping people through self-reliant activities. We are better together!
